"Hope is not something we can see or touch, it is something we can feel. When someone is in active addiction or living in recovery feeling hopeless and alone, that the entire world has cast shame and doubt upon them, one of the most humane things we can do for them and our communities is share the love and hope we have in our hearts for them with them."

- Lynnel Cox, Founder of Hand Delivered Hope

Hand Delivered Hope

is a group of motivated and concerned citizens that have been affected by the opioid epidemic and can not ignore the gaps in systems that have created road blocks to those both seeking treatment and living in recovery.

Hand Delivered Hope provides street outreach to those who have been impacted by such road blocks and subsequently call the streets home. Delivering basic needs, nutrition and resources alongside encouragement that recovery is possible, education on how to practice harm reduction and most importantly their message of hope that they have not been forgotten.

Hand Delivered Hope recognizes that although a person in active addiction may not be seeking recovery that does not mean that their medical, nutritional, physical/emotional needs as well as safety concerns no longer exists. The needs of those in active addiction should never be neglected.

Hand Delivered Hope works to educate state lawmakers, health care professionals and the general public for the need to continue to advocate for the improved standards of care that are currently affecting the lives of our loved ones in treatment and in aftercare.

Here is to never losing hope ❤️

To date we have delivered hope to over 2,000 people in need, directed them to resources and provided assistance through love and support whether in active addiction or recovery.

Hand Delivered Hope is a 501(c) (3) non-profit organization.
